If someone from abroad asked you to suggest the best strategies for reaching the British population with the gospel, how would you answer them? Are you following your own advice?

Today's blog post, aimed at church leaders, is short and sweet - based on my experience of helping missionaries plan their work by asking them questions.Â

1. If someone from abroad asked you to suggest the best strategies for reaching the British population with the gospel, how would you answer them?
2. Are you following your own advice?
3. If not, what would it take for you and your church to get to the point where you are following that advice?
