TALKING MISSIOLOGY WITH BILL BLACK

A fascinating interview with a thoughtful Orthodox theologian and missionary.
Category: Observations

One of the things that I would advocate to any Christian leader or organisation is that they should listen to people who understand them but who don't necessarily agree with them. This sort of approach helps us to identify blind spots and weaknesses in our own lives in a way that very little else will.

Bill Black (who blogs as Onesimus) is a former Presbyterian minister, theologian and missionary with a PhD in puritan theology. These days he is an Orthodox priest and teacher based in Kenya. This fascinating interview is both challenging and heartwarming. Even though it is rather long (about 80 mins). I strongly encourage you to give it a listen.

Oh, and he has some nice things to say about Bible Translation.
