From the Daily Telegraph:

> Those travelling on a Chinese Shandong airlines flight were asked to get out and push when their plane broke down after landing.
>
> The CRJ7 plane with 69 passengers and seven aircrew flying from Guilin in the south of China to Zhengzhou broke down before it could taxi to the arrivals terminal. It had travelled 500 miles before the engine failed on the runway.
>
> Airport staff were called out to push, but needed the passengers' help because it would not budge.
>
> It took nearly two hours to push the jet the half mile to a side lane.
>
> "Thank God it was only a 20-ton medium-sized plane," said one of the airport workers. "If it were a big plane, it would have knocked us out."
