MISSION IS...

Posted on April 19, 2021 by Eddie

A public service announcement...
Category: Observations

Over the next few weeks, I plan to produce a series of blog posts which will outline my own convictions about the nature and practice of Christian mission.

The posts in this series are likely to be longer and more detailed than the typical 500-1,000 word posts that I write most days and (all being well) I will include references to the works that I cite. Although the series isn't aimed at an academic publication, I'll aim for a standard that could be published if anyone were interested. I will combine the whole lot and release it on Kindle and as a PDF on this site when it is all finished.

So why am I posting something about what I'm planning on writing, rather than just getting on and writing it? The thing is, this series will take a little more effort than my usual blog posts, so this is basically a warning that I may be posting less frequently than usual. However, all being well, the first post in the series: Mission is: Problematic, should appear tomorrow.