AFRICAN BIBLE COMMENTARY

Posted on July 6, 2006 by Eddie

Category: Language In the Bible

Many thanks to Andrew Jones (tallskinnykiwi) for posting information about the New Africa Bible Commentary. This publication by SIM is described as being the first one-volume Bible commentary to be written in Africa by Africans for African churches. It certainly is good news to see a commentary written by Africans and addressing the questions that African life and culture bring to the Bible. Just as important as the authorship is the fact that there are already plans in hand to translated the commentary into French, Amharic, Protuguese and perhaps other major languages spoken in Africa. Not only have SIM produced a commentary written by and for Africans, but they are also taking steps to make sure that the commentary can be read by the huge numbers of Africans who don't speak English. Well done to them!