A couple of days ago, I posted about an article in Christianity Magazine to which I'd contributed some comments. At that point, I mentioned that the article wasn't available on their website and that you would have to buy a copy if you wanted to see my thoughts on what world mission would look like in the future. Things have changed, the article is now featured on the Christianity Magazine website, but for the next few months only the first third will actually appear online. My comments don't appear till later on in the article, so if you want to see what I have to say, you still have to pay. Hey, they've got bills to pay too!
