WHY I LOVE BIBLE TRANSLATION

Posted on August 27, 2009 by Eddie

Category: Impact

I rather enjoyed this post from Andy Cheung:

> ... Every aspect of church life ought to be dominated by a sense and gladness for the divinely inspired Scripture. Biblical thinking and word-centred ministry should be at the heart of every church activity, whether childrenâ€™s work or pulpit preaching. Therefore, accurate, usable translations that service the needs of all parts of the Church ought to be received and used with God-glorifying satisfaction. Henry Martyn once said, â€œwhat I have learnt from the Word of God is satisfyingâ€¦ which nothing else in the whole world isâ€ . Who would want this experience denied for others?
>
> So I love Bible translation, and I love the work of organisations such as Wycliffe, the most visible of the various groups involved in the task of translating the Bible. I noticed recently that Wycliffe International launched a new website called The Word is Life and you can visit their website at www.thewordislife.net I love the Scripture quotation they have on the front page because it ties in so well with what Iâ€™ve been trying to say in this post: â€œDeclare his glory among the nations, his marvelous deeds among all peoples.â€ Psalm 96:3

You can read my posts on why I think Bible Translation is important here, here and here.