SLOW CHURCH AND SLOW MISSION

Posted on June 14, 2010 by Eddie

Category: Quotes

Our modern Western society values speed and getting things done quickly. In the case of Bible translation, it is often assumed that getting a lot of translations done in a short time is a good thing, but as I have written before (here and here, for example), this may not always be the case.

With this in mind, I enjoyed these reflections on slow Church from Spinking Out Loud.

> - our interventions inÂ one anotherâ€™sÂ lives being focused on lovingly commending the good news of the gospel, rather than driving only at behavioural outcomes.
> - joy and hope coming not from activity or success (Â which struggles when faced with a quiet life or failure) butÂ from knowing the Lord Jesus.
> - learning to be thankful for the people God has put you with â€“ the body, perfectly fitted together.

You can read the whole article here.
HT Tim Chester