YOU CAN'T TRUST PEOPLE IN AFRICA

Posted on July 6, 2010 by Eddie

Categories: Africa, Computing/Internet

At least that's what PayPal and other online companies seem to think.

> I havenâ€™t been able to use PayPal for two months. I just got profiled for extra security measures on Facebook. I canâ€™t make certain purchases from Africa. Few organizations ship goods to me here.
>
> Letâ€™s be honest; living in Africa, or being African, gives you a certain unwelcome aroma in the eyes of global corporations. Frankly, weâ€™re just not trustworthy. (read more)

HASH reflects on his experiences of living in Africa and points out the injustice of treating a whole continent as if they were cyber-criminals.