LAST OF THE DINOSAURS?

Posted on April 1, 2007 by Eddie

Category: Observations

I didn't have any work to do today, so with some friends we made a trip by road to some forest north of here. It was a fairly long and tiring drive - but at least the car was air conditioned. There are still extensive tracts of rain forest here in Congo which have not been properly explored and it is reckoned by some that there are dinosaurs, or at least their descendants living in some of the areas. We went for a short walk from the car into the forest (you wouldn't want to walk far in this weather) and came across some very large - about a foot across - footprints. Our guide said that they belonged to a large lizard of some sort, but they were certainly too large for any monitor lizard I've ever seen. Foolishly, I forgot to take my camera on the trip, so I can't show you a photograph, but perhaps I saw traces of the last of the dinosaurs!