The group I'm working with here are involved in language work in a number of countries, including the Central African Republic. This is a place that few westerners have heard of, even though there is a fair degree of civil unrest and trouble there. This report from the BBC will help give you an idea of the situation in the the country. It will also give you an idea of some of the challenges we face as we plan for Bible translation and literacy work in this part of the world.
