SKIP TO MADAGASCAR

Posted on June 1, 2007 by Eddie

Category: Madagascar

Most days we walk across the Southampton University campus on our way to the common. Generally there are students handing out flyers and advertisements. For the most part, these are for night clubs are student entertainment events and the people handing them out tend just avoid looking at the middle aged couple with the dog who are obviously not up for a night on the town. Sometimes, generally when they are collecting money, the students do take notice of us - though on dog walks we tend to having nothing more than poo bags and dog biscuits in our pockets. Today, there were students doing a 24 hour skipping marathon and collecting money for a project in Madagascar. Imagine the astonishment when Sue explained that not only did she work in Madagascar but that she knew the town where their project was based.

Anyway, why not take a look at the SKIP Southampton website and get an idea of what these folks are planning to do. We are impressed!