FROM THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

Posted on June 20, 2007 by Eddie

Category: Church: UK

This is an interesting insight into the Church in the UK from today's Telegraph.

> One piece of interesting information I did pick up this week came from the Royal Mail's Alan Leighton, who did some work for the Church of England, and who discovered that, for many parishes, the single biggest expense was the upkeep of cemeteries, while the biggest source of extra income was marriages and christenings.
>
> But - and here's the point - apparently the latter aren't keeping up with the cost of the former. A somewhat grim encapsulation of life on this green isle, but a memorable one.