IS PIZZA AND BEER LEGITIMATE FOR COMMUNION?

Posted on August 12, 2007 by Eddie

Categories: Christian Life, Theology

Hamo has posted a really interesting article today in which he talks about the way in which the young church he is involved in is trying to get to grips with what Holy Communion really means. He starts off with reflections on his own background and different church traditions and then describes an exercise that his church used in thinking through the question. Both parts of the post are worth reflecting on - though I suspect that many Christians will find themselves somewhere between bemused and irritated by his reflections.