LOCAL FOOD

Posted on March 20, 2014 by Eddie

Category: Observations

There is nothing like travel to broaden the culinary horizons. I've eaten cane rat in Ivory Coast, delicious curry from street vendors in Thailand and something unidentifiable - but tasty - for breakfast in Cambodia. Today I ate lunch with a group of church leaders in Accra and was delighted to find this 'local' delicacy being served.

Not as good a my mam's, but not bad at all.