WHOSE GOD: WHOSE THEOLOGY?

Posted on April 9, 2014 by Eddie

Category: Theology

"... until recent years, systematic theology has at its best tolerated interpretations of Christology from outside the mainstream academic quarters, that is, mostly Euro-American and predominantly male theologians. Toleration has meant paying lip service to the role of "exotic" interpretations of Christ stemming from the soil of Africa, Asia, Latin America, and non-dominant cultures in the Global North. At the same time, these interpretations have been marginalized, put in separate volumes and essays - apart from the "serious" dogmatic and systematic works." (p.70)