The sainted Lingamish is looking for interesting blogs and has asked five bloggers each to name five others that he should read. It's actually a difficult question because not all of the blogs I follow (British politics for example) would be of interest to Lingamish, but here goes anyway...

Phil Prior: Phil really should write about more than rugby matches and church advertising as he has a lot of good stuff to say.

Paul Merrill used to blog about life in Kenya, now he talks about life in Colorado; less exotic perhaps but always fascinating.

Riverbend: an Iraqi woman, blogging about war, peace and being a refugee. This is the only blog I know that regularly makes me cry, I just wish that the British government would sign up to her RSS feed.

Brian Russel: Thought provoking missional church thinking and Biblical studies.

Andrew Hamilton: A fascinating rethink of church life from the suburbs in Western Australia.
