THE BIGGEST PROBLEM IN MISSIOLOGY…

Posted on November 10, 2014 by Eddie

The central problem of mission studies, theology and methods summed up in one word.
Category: Observations

Missionaries.

I could quite easily finish this post here, but it is probably worth adding a little more.

When studying mission, it is all too easy to get drawn into studies about theology or methodology and to find the answers to all of our problems in those domains. If only we understood things better or could improve our processes, surely everything would go really well.

However, the biggest hinderance to my work in mission is not my lack of theology or organisation (though I have big gaps in both), it is my lack of sanctification.

Thanks to Uncle Francis for inspiring this thought (as he has inspired much of my thinking over the last 20 years).