MISSIONAL READING OF SCRIPTURE

Posted on January 3, 2008 by Eddie

Category: Mission

Brian has some wonderful random thoughts on the missional reading of Scripture including this brilliant snippet.

> It is vital to learn to think "Christianly" But in todayâ€™s climate where the very claims of Christianity are not widely accepted or even understood, any approach to Scripture that merely increases the knowledge of "insiders" is in danger of making the Gospel itself more and more irrelevant to the rest of the world. A missional reading demands a reading of the text from within a context of mission in which Christ followers are engaged not merely with increasing their own grasp of their own faith but are actively engaged with the World in order to make disciples of Jesus. Christian education therefore needs to have as its goal the making of disciples in the biblical sense of the world: disciples who follow Jesus in the mission of making more disciples*.*