I've just finished reading Tom Sine's new book and wanted to say a few words about it. To put it simply, it is wonderful!

Subtitled, Creating the future one mustard seed at a time, the book is divided into five sections (or conversations as they are called). The first section looks at four ways in which Church life is being rethought in our current cultural context; emerging, missional, mosaic and monastic churches. The second section looks at the wider world context in an era of globalistation, 9/11 and a growing disparity between the rich and poor. The third section examines what it means that the Kingdom of God should come on earth and how the church should interact with the wider world. The fourth (and to my mind, the best) section examines various world problems such as the increasing wealth of the West (intriguing problem) and the final section looks at how different church communities are coming together to meet the sorts of challenges that the book raises.

The book is an easy read, not too many long words or sentences, but a very challenging one and it comes strongly recommended by me!
