Tim Chester has just kicked off what looks as though it will be a fascinating series on the place of sermons in church life.

> The case for the sermon seems to be that it reflects the authority if Godâ€™s word, because the word is proclaimed without interruption or question. Think about it for a moment. What a bizarre definition of authority. Authority = lack of interruption! Surely the authority of the word is best expressed when we live in obedience to that word. So letâ€™s work the truth down into peopleâ€™s hearts and lives. Read More
